BAMBOO TAILLIES

BAMBOO

Bamboo money, an elongated narrow, tablet like one derived from the ancient metal checks current in the various parts of China particularly Kai-an-Pu, capital of Shantung as far back as 1112 B.C. As time went on the use of taillies was not limited to this locality and were used in all parts of China. This subsidiary money was issued by the State, by private banks, and by individuals and served as a media of small exchange according to the values marked on each. Besides the value they usually contained the name of the issuer, the address, etc. The taillies, as a rule, had a limited field of circulation and were purely local although in a few cases of prominent issuers their use was extended over several areas. Some taillies served as checks redeemable in cash on presentation; others were used to calculate the amount of a journey, a days work and for other uses. They were and are extensively used in gambling houses.

Denominations are stated on each and run from large amounts down to a single cash. The size also varies from small to six or eight inches. Some are simply marked stripes with the inscription burned in while others are well made and of remarkable workmanship. Countermarks are sometimes used to 'guarantee' redemption and to prevent counterfeiting and fraud. Other taillies were made from different materials which will be listed later.

- 17%. Paraphrase Item I. The Chinese always bury money with the dead (to pay their passage across the river styx). Fortunately for collectors the early Chinese used money of bronze, jade and stone. Modern Chinese however purchase imitation coins made of paper mache and their paper bills which are buried with the dead and also burned at the altar.

|---------------------------|-------|------|--------------------|
| Silver coin (Silver coin) | 118 | Cost | $780.00 |
| Copper, bronze, lead | 7800. | " | $11,110.00 |

This is the largest private collection of such coins known. The only collection in America which comes anywhere near approximating it is the collection made by the late John G. M. M. which is now in the American Numismatic Society Collection in New York City.

Most of the gold coins are mounted on 135 heavy composition boards and all coins are accompanied by an outline card describing the coins and indicating their value and condition.

The silver coins from the period 1915 on are made of copper, brass and silver and are all in separate envelopes fully described.

Total cost $ 11,110

AMULETS AND TALISMANS

The Chinese are great believers in luck and the temple priests for centuries have had a lucrative business in the selling of 'good luck' amulets or charms which are usually worn around the neck and always carried on the body.

This figure is known as Shou and is pointed on the back of a three legged frog, statelily holding above his head a string of cash which legends say were found for him by the frog when he was about to starve to death.

Such 'tokens' as this are kept in the shops and are supposed to bring financial success to the owners daily efforts.

Some amulets are purchased to bring 'good luck and a thousand blessings' other 'lucky five sons': good crops, etc.
